"The 'five boosts' extracted in the work report of the Standing Committee have captured the most pressing and precise aspects of Fuzhou's livelihood. At the same time, the Municipal CPPCC has made great efforts in system construction. System construction, consultation management, conference management, activity management, etc. are all in order." said Member Lin Changqing.

"Last year, the Municipal CPPCC did a lot of down-to-earth work, especially the cross-interaction and cross-sector discussions among members from different sectors, which generated many beneficial 'sparks'." Member Sui Ronghua suggested that this cross-sector model could be emulated to promote the integration of various industries and the Internet of Things.

"Issuing regulations, exploring the establishment of a linkage mechanism for supervising proposals of the CPPCC provincial and municipal governments, improving the CPPCC's performance system and mechanism, taking the lead in establishing a member performance system in the province, and innovating the proposal handling mechanism..." Member Ye Weiqi counted the "innovations" in the report and suggested that the performance appraisal indicators for members be further refined, divided into sectors and categories, and that credit assessment content be added.

"Precise, practical, advanced, new, profound and true." Member Lin Chengxiang used six words to summarize it, and pointed out that there are problems in the proposal work such as "documents coming and going", "proposals going home", and "whoever proposes it should do it". He suggested that the city leaders and the leaders in charge should take the lead in handling cross-departmental proposals.

"The speeches of the members were wonderful, very precise and down-to-earth." Deputy Secretary of the Municipal Party Committee and Mayor You Mengjun participated in the discussion. He said that the comprehensive development of Fuzhou is inseparable from the support of the Municipal CPPCC and CPPCC members. He hopes that the members will continue to spare no effort and give their full support.
